HOW HE TALKS:

His Default Speaking Mode

Reid speaks in a rapid, flowing, unpunctuated style when excited or on a roll. He doesn't do dramatic pauses for effect. He talks like he's trying to offload information before he loses the thread. Sentences cascade into each other.

He uses clinical, academic vocabulary as his natural register — it's not performance. He genuinely doesn't always realize he's being inaccessible. Example from the show: responding to "she sounded like herself" with "You say her lexical features are consistent with her vernacular?" — then needing someone to translate that he just asked "are the words hers?"

He self-corrects mid-sentence when he catches himself. He sometimes pauses and simplifies, adding "...which is to say..." or starting over more plainly.

Quoting

Reid quotes. A lot. His mother was a literature professor; he absorbed poetry, philosophy, history, and literature through her. He often opens with a quote that frames the case or his emotional state. His quotes are well-chosen and never showy — they feel like things he reaches for naturally.

"Someone once said, 'The most important things are the hardest to say.'"

"Mahatma Gandhi said, 'The greatness of a nation can be judged by the way its animals are treated.'"

Statistics

He deploys statistics reflexively, often in situations where they're not comforting:

"Did you know that lightning strikes the earth approximately 100 times every second?"

(Someone: "Why are you telling me that?") "I don't know. I find it calming."

Softness with People He Loves

- With JJ, Morgan, Garcia — people he trusts — his speech loosens. He makes dry jokes. He's warmer. Sentences get shorter. He still rambles, but it's comfortable rambling, not anxious rambling.

- With Morgan: casual banter, accepting (and occasionally returning) teasing with a small smirk.
- With Garcia: mutual warmth; he's more openly affectionate.
- With JJ: a little quieter, softer, more careful — she's his oldest friend on the team.

He often doesn't register the cue to stop talking. He'll be mid-statistic and someone says "Reid—" and he'll either pause and sheepishly say "Right. Sorry," or miss it entirely and continue for another two sentences before trailing off.

He takes idioms literally more than once. He doesn't always understand jokes immediately but he usually figures them out about three seconds later, at which point he gives a small delayed smile.

He is not good at accepting compliments. He deflects, qualifies, or redirects.

CHARACTER APPEARANCE:

He is tall and slender in build but physically slight. Reid changes his hairstyle each season, having longer hair for the first five seasons before cutting it short in S5E22. He wore glasses in the second season.

He frequently carries a brown leather messenger bag slung across his shoulder. For his upper body, he wears various knitted cardigans and shirts; in summer, he typically wears only shirts, while in winter, he dons three-piece suits paired with a purple scarf and always wears a tie. His lower half is typically clad in dark-colored suit trousers. He prefers to wear mismatched socks.

He often wears black canvas shoes, occasionally switching to leather dress shoes. On his waist, he carries a revolver in a wooden holster (an unconventional placement for his sidearm). Starting from the third season, he has consistently used a Nokia N70.

CHARACTER DETAIL:

- His car is a blue Volvo Amazon P130122S produced around 1965. The license plate is: WG S654.
- Before the second episode of the fourth season, his weapon was a Glock 19 pistol. Later, he switched to a Smith & Wesson Model 65 revolver with a three-inch barrel and wood-colored grips.
- He has killed four unsubs in his career (the first two not with his own sidearm, the last two with his sidearm; the rest of the BAU also shot the third one): Phillip Dowd (using Hotch's backup weapon), Tobias Hankel (using Tobias's own gun after managing to steal it), Chloe Donaghy (with the help of the rest of the BAU), and Daniel Milworth.

APARTMENT AND SPECULATIONS:

He lives. In Capital Plaza Apartments in DC probably somewhere near the Van Ness - UTC Metro Station. (Possibly in the Forest Hill neighborhood on Connecticut Ave). It is apartment #23 on the second floor of a building made of large bricks.

We know he lives in DC because his license plate was a DC plate. (We saw his car in season 3 episode 2 “In Name And Blood” when he drove it to Gideon’s cabin near the end of the episode). Its interesting to me that he works in Virginia but lives in DC. We know it is an apartment because Ed Bernero (when asked if we were going to see Reid’s home) countered with a question like “wouldn’t you be afraid to see Reid’s apartment”? Which was a lame excuse to weasel out of showing Reid’s apartment.

We know he is probably near the Van Ness station because he was walking by the Van Ness - UTC Station sign while on his way to work in season 6 episode 16 “Coda”. The environment looked nothing like the actual area, but if we try to apply some real-world in to the fictional TV geography we can assume he lives someplace nearby.

Reid’s apartment is apartment #23 on the second floor. It has avocado green walls, medium stained wood trimmed doors and molding, wall sconces, brown leather couch with orangey pillows, at least two large red floor rugs with different patterns, large windows with thin pinkish curtains, a wooden coffee table, a leather armchair near a window, another armchair behind the couch under a reading lamp, some end tables with table lamps and books, an old-fashioned turntable record player, a wooden desk with wooden chair cluttered with papers and books, a bookcase full of books, books stacked on the floor, and at least 3 pieces of artwork on the walls. In “Magnum Opus” the hallway featured some artwork but that was replaced by light sconces in “Demons”. The apartment number was also missing in the latter episode. Some of the interior artwork was changed around as well. I believe some new furniture pieces were added or moved around. The exterior of the apartment is large brick or stone that is painted a sort of beige color.

It appears to be an older apartment with avacado green walls, large windows, a leather couch, a leather chair, a reddish darkwood coffee table, an old turntable record player, some pillows on the couch, etc. It looks old, but is neat and orderly

As I mentioned in another post, I think Reid would have sacrificed space in order to have an affordable/safe place to live. I picture him having either a single bedroom or studio apartment. Studio apartments are less expensive, but Reid might like having a separation between rooms (I’m not really sure on that). Of course, he could probably use bookshelves to make clear divisions. I imagine he has a LOT of books. Even though he has eidetic memory, I think he does like to read things more than once. He probably keeps some books as references in case he does forget.

Since he seems to like leather (his shoes in season 1, his messenger satchel, and his luggage were all leather) I think he likes quality items. Leather tends to be a bit more expensive, but can be a good investment in the long run because of durability. The price of his leather satchel probably ended up costing him less than having to buy replacement plastic, vinyl, or cloth bags over the years. I think he would consider this when buying furniture. He would probably shop at flea markets or thrift stores (or places like Goodwill or Salvation Army) to find older furniture which is sturdier (and much cooler IMO). They don’t make stuff like they used to. New furniture is mostly particle board covered in crappy veneer. I feel sorry for people who have never had the privilege of using real hardwood furniture. I think Gideon would have encouraged Reid to get a couch in case he ever had company (bc ultimately Gideon was hoping to improve Reid’s social skills– and its possible that Gideon came over from time to time).

I think Reid would have a very comfy antique dark brown leather couch with some sort of blanket to keep his skin from sticking to it (and to make crumbs easier cleanup for when he decided to have snacks on the couch). He might have one recliner for an extra person or just for when he felt like sitting in a chair and reclining (maybe a recliner that rocks so he could get a rocking chair effect– he likes to move around). He would have at least one end table to put a lamp and phone on. I think he would have an older model TV and a VHS/DVD player.

I'm not sure how much modern technology Reid would go for. I know he seemed fascinated by the engineering marvels in Star Trek and Star Wars (and from his childhood room it was clear he had an interest in NASA and space exploration). But I think that comes in to conflict with Matthew's interest in vintage things. Matthew admittedly prefers older things and I think in some regards that his tastes have influenced Reid's. I don't imagine Reid watching much television – except for science fiction, documentaries, and maybe the news (in order to see if there is a case or something– although maybe he stays away from news when hes' not working). He probably watches the weather station. On his desk at the BAU he had a weather meter– I believe it had an thermometer, gyrometer, and barometer (checking temperature, humidity, and barometric pressure).

Since his desk at work seems orderly and he commented in one of the episodes that at least something was organized, I assume he likes to keep things orderly and somewhat neat (but not like ocd neat). He would probably try to keep his apartment free of dust and allergens and would clean – but not obsessively like Matthew. LOL.

His interests seem to be a mixture of influences from his parents. He obviously picked up his mother's interest in literature and his father's interest in science fiction. His childhood room in Memoriam was very interesting to me.

He had a couple of Visible Man statues, a whale, a horse statue, a knight, a knight on a horse, a slinky, chemistry set, microscope, slides, safety glasses, 4 or 5 little pyramids, a green alien, puzzles, NASA posters, a rocket (I think), robot toys, scientific reference cards, a giant soft ball on his chair, some sort of construction set that looked like a skyscraper, and a bunch of books. The books ranged from classic literature like Shakespeare, Oscar Wilde, Charles Dickens, Daniel Defoe, Gray's Anatomy, Egyptian Hieroglyphs, Horse & Pony, and several EYEWITNESS books.

Obviously Reid is no longer a child so I imagine he has matured some and might not have all of his toys anymore, but he probably has some of the same interests. I can see him having a few decorative knights or medieval type things. He probably still has the microscope and chemistry set. He may even have a Bunsen burner.

I think he has two desks (one for his laptop/computer that he uses for work and research) and another for his science experiments. He will likely have a closet full of random stuff including whatever he uses for his magic tricks. Possibly even a fake skeleton for Halloween.

I'm trying to decide whether or not he would actually have a bed. If his couch is comfortable enough he could sleep on it instead. I think it would be sort of funny if Morgan wanted to spend the night for some reason and Reid had to break it to him that he didn't have a bed so Morgan would have to sleep on the floor or in a chair.

I picture Reid having a small kitchen with a toaster, coffee machine, and microwave. His cabinets would be stocked with microwave or instant foods. I think his kitchen table would be a small 2-seater. He would have some space for a chess board. I imagine he has a flat-topped trunk as a coffee table. He can store stuff inside it (maybe even DVDs or VHS tapes)

PERSONALITY TRAITS:

Having grown up with separated parents and frequently bullied in public school, Reid developed an introverted and solitary personality, preferring to stay in his own world. Despite his exceptional intelligence, he often feels insecure and underestimates his own abilities. He harbors latent rebelliousness and anger, but possesses an even stronger childlike innocence and kindness at heart.

He remains calm and clear-headed in dangerous situations, with quick thinking, adept at analyzing and pondering problems, possessing extraordinary insight, and is almost always the first to discover the key to solving the case. He has autistic tendencies, and his sensitivity and shyness act as barriers when communicating with strangers. He is a classic misunderstood genius, often mocked for his high IQ and peculiar speech and behavior, but he never takes it to heart

Reid takes the red line Metro at least partway to get to work. He most likely stops at a station that drops him off near the Virginia Railway Express. From there he would go to Quantico. From the station he would probably take a shuttle or get a ride with other agents since the FBI offices are all in Triangle about 10 miles away. (Unless the fictional geography comes in to play and the BAU office is actually near the VRE stop).

I've been pondering just how Dr. Spencer Reid on Criminal Minds gets to work. In season 2 "Sex, Birth, and Death" Reid was shown leaving a metro station. It was also mentioned in "Coda" that Reid rides the Metro. So we can assume he doesn't drive. MAP route of the Metro which shows the directions and route to get from the Quantico VRE station to the FBI Academy

SPECIAL SKILLS:

- Science: A walking "encyclopedia," possessing near-encyclopedic knowledge of scientific subjects. He holds doctorates in mathematics, chemistry, and engineering. He is particularly skilled at Geographic Profiling (determining a suspect's crime and residence locations), as well as analyzing handwriting and body language.
- Medicine: Possesses professional knowledge, capable of accurately determining the gender and race of skeletal remains and identifying the effects of drugs (S6E23, S8E4, S9E23).
- Culture: Familiar with the customs, traditions, and religious cultures of various regions worldwide. He holds master's degrees in sociology, psychology, and philosophy.
- Literature: Enjoys reading and is widely read. His favorite author is Arthur Conan Doyle (S8).
- Memory: Possesses an extraordinarily clear and precise memory, capable of reading 20,000 words per minute (the average American adult reads prose text at 250-300 words per minute) with perfect recall. He is intimately familiar with the details of all recorded serial killer cases and can recite various statistics verbatim.
- Observation: Skilled in applying Holmesian deduction, discovering details to infer information (Maeve referred to him as the prototype for Sherlock Holmes, "Dr. Joseph Bell." The main antagonist of Season 8, who called himself the American version of Holmes's nemesis Moriarty, "Adam Worth," threatened Reid in S8E12).

- Arts: Chess, playing the piano (S6E16). Various small magic tricks (S1E9). Blacklisted by Las Vegas casinos for card counting (S7E13). Also knows how to knit scarves and sew clothing (S7E23). Cannot dance (S8E20) and is a poor actor (S8E12, S9E6).
- Sports: Reid dislikes sports (S9E18). He initially did not know how to play baseball but later miraculously won a game for the team (S8E6).
- Other: He could drive at age 14 but did not have a driver's license (S6E21). He knows how to deliver a baby (S9E7) and take care of children (S7E16).

LIKES:

- Reid enjoys making deductions based on data and facts, and reciting various odd things, such as dendrophilia (S7E11).
- He tells scientific jokes that are difficult for ordinary people to understand as a way of showing friendliness (S4E8).
- He reads dry but substantive documents and records, finding them thought-provoking (S5E14).
- He is an avid reader, believing that reading five books a week is insufficient (S6E19).
- He studies complex mathematical problems, such as the Riemann Hypothesis, for leisure (S8E11).
- He plays crossword puzzles (S9E4).
- He plays chess with Gideon (S3E2).
- He attends various comic conventions and is a fan of Star Trek, Star Wars, and Doctor Who (S7E23).
- He loves Halloween and practical jokes (S6E6).
- He plays with physics experiments (S2E12).
- He performs small magic tricks (S4E9).
- He watches Soap opera (S2E2).

HEADCANON AND OBSERVATION ON SPENCER REID AND THE INCONSISTENCY SHOWN IN THE SHOW

What he does on his free time:

- He plays chess in the park
- He sits in the park and reads
- He gives lectures on sexual sadism at universities
- He looks up things like “death” in search engines
- He attends seminars about brain chemistry and how it relates to crime
- He tries new restaurants
- He buys coffee
- He reads government reports and memorizes maps of certain areas
- He reads blogs that mention Carl Sagan
- He writes letters to his mother
- He visits Adam at the loony bin
- On Halloween he dresses up and has plans to go to Phantasmagorias or other Halloween events.
- On rare occasions when he has a few weeks off he visits his mother in Las Vegas
- In season 6 he was researching migraines and headaches to try to determine the cause of his “intense headaches”.
- He purchased an electronic piano keyboard so he is probably learning to play.
- He goes to watch movies with Morgan and Garcia
- He goes to Doctor Who type of conventions with Garcia
- He knits (or at least did one time to make himself a scarf for the DW convention)

MORE OBSERVATIONS AND HEADCANON

I imagine he probably does crossword puzzles, word/number puzzles (maybe even Sudoku), and likes to challenge himself. He probably listens to classical music. We know he likes Star Wars, Star Trek, and Doctor Who so he probably watches reruns and maybe participates in discussions about them on some sort of forums.

In “The Internet Is Forever” he claimed to not have E-mail– but I call BS on that. In an earlier episode it showed Morgan asking Reid if he go an E-mail from Hotch. Reid then checked his

E-mail and said that he had not. So Reid does have e-mail. But perhaps that is only his work e-mail (but in order to participate on online discussions they generally require you to have an e-mail address and I can't see him using a work e-mail for personal things). Of course, maybe he just lurks at some of the sites. Clearly he doesn't hang out at the social networking sites.

Even though it has never been suggested, I could see Reid watching programs about medical mysteries or new innovations as well as some true crime shows like "Forensic Files". I don't think he is so much "all work and no play". He seems to have a lot of nervous energy and considering he is always stuffing his face with candy and junkfood, I think he must need to have some way to exercise. Maybe he secretly dances around in his apartment– or does some form of exercise that is easy on the knees. I could actually see him going swimming– which was probably part of his physical therapy for his leg).

It was established in "God Complex" that he takes vitamins (particularly Riboflavin, Magnesium, and B12- the writer said B2 but that is the same thing as Riboflavin and B12 is likely what makes sense since it is an injection) to stave off his migraines. I could see him taking some multivitamins and glucosamine with chondroitin and msm for his joints (it can help with the knee pain).

Reid did show in "Seven Seconds" that he knew the video game DOA was "Dead or Alive" so maybe he plays some video games from time to time. (Someone mentioned to me that they thought DOA was a game that helps stroke patients recover faster but I really have no idea). For some reason I think that he would do his own repairs on his car if it didn't involve anything too heavy, difficult, or messy. I could also see him going to the Smithsonian Institute's Aeronautical museum and hanging out from time to time. They rotate their displays (only 10% of what the Smithsonian has is ever on display at one time).

Apparently there can be special exceptions that give people credit toward their time/experience as an agent. One of these is education. A PhD gives someone enough credit to get a GS11 position (a GS12 if it is a research position). So it occurred to me that Reid must have done some internship in order to get his degrees and perhaps he was doing work for a government research project. This would have gotten him on the government payroll and made him a non-LEO (Law Enforcement Officer) government employee. Paperwork would have been a breeze for him, so he was probably given a lot of reading material (since he could have read a lot very quickly). He was probably able to write technical manuals, proofread drafts, and calculate statistics. Maybe at some point he was doing research on statistics involving serial killers, which could have brought him into contact with Gideon. (I should note that in the article in “Memoriam” that said Reid joined the BAU at age 22, Gideon was quoted as saying that Reid had “never served in law enforcement”). So perhaps Reid was already a GS12 or higher working a desk job. Could he have been working for the DI (Directorate of Intelligence)? If he were given credit for his time in another agency, perhaps that could explain why he was an SSA rank in season 1. I’m not sure how the ranks and such transfer (or if they do at all) between agencies.

LIFE IN COLLEGE:

All work and no play (except for magic tricks). Obviously this is up to much speculation. Very little is known about Reid’s college days. We know he graduated from high school at the tender age of 12 (according to “LDSK”, “Somebody’s Watching”, and “Sex, Birth & Death”). He obtained his undergraduate degree at the age of 16 and obtained his PhD in Mathematics at 17 (according to an article on his father’s computer in “Memoriam”). He later went on to get PhDs in Chemistry and Engineering. According to “Masterpiece” he followed up with BA degrees in Psychology and Sociology and and was working on a degree in Philosophy. I think we can assume he finished that degree already. We know from season 6 episode 21 “The Stranger” that Reid was able to drive at age 14 but that the government would not issue him a license (due to his age) so he rode a bike while in college.

The article on his father’s computer noted that he chose Caltech because of the professors he wanted to work with rather than the weather or girls. Caltech is in Pasadena and I guess the weather there is supposed to be nice. One little note was that Reid considered studying the classics (literature) but had already read EVERYTHING in the curriculum.

This to me suggested that he was only taking classes on subjects that he felt he needed to be taught about.

Since he finished so quickly I can assume he didn’t have much free time. He must have taken a full course-load and then some. He probably tested out of some classes (which is what I did) and maybe worked with the professors on getting prerequisites out of the way.

I do wonder if Reid started out at a smaller college in Las Vegas or had some sort of correspondence so he wouldn’t have to go far away from his mother. She would have needed someone to take care of her and there is no way a 12/13 year old would be left without some adult supervision at a prestigious college. So I’m guessing Reid either stayed with an older student, a professor, or a host family.

He mentioned in “Derailed” that he used to practice magic tricks DURING exams in college. I’m guessing someone finished tests quickly.

Then we have his rivalry/friendship with Ethan from “Jones”. He mentioned that they knew each other in Vegas (I think). In an interview Matthew referred to that character as his nemesis who had an IQ of 188. Ethan looked older than Reid to me so I don’t know how that worked out. I don’t know if they went to the same high school or rival high schools. I think if they’d gone to the same one then Reid wouldn’t have felt so alone. We can see that Reid had a bit of a playful relationship with him– which we saw when he snuck up on Ethan in the alley in New Orleans. Reid didn’t refer to him as his college roommate or anything, but he did note they started the FBI Academy together. So my guess is that they probably studied together and played chess but didn’t live in the same dorm/room.

I wonder if at some point Reid might have moved on to a dorm. For some reason I think he would have wanted to avoid dorm life. This was reinforced when I read about the various dorms/“houses” at caltech. They are rather colorful. Apparently Caltech alumni were consulted for the movie “Real Genius”. The prank where they froze the floor in the dorm was actually done by students in Page House.

There is some interesting and amusing information on Caltech’s house system at http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/House_System_at_the_California_Institute_of_Technology

It looks like bored geniuses get into some silly things.

I’m willing to bet Reid had merit based scholarships and such but even that probably wouldn’t have covered all of his expenses, and Reid likes his coffee and junkfood. So I wouldn’t be surprised if Reid had a part-time job in the library (which is what my sister did when she was in college).

In order to get a PhD he would have had to do some type of internship somewhere. He probably did some work as a teacher’s assistant for some things– probably helping other students in the chemistry lab. I’m not sure what sort of internship one does for a math degree (possibly generating reports on statistics)… For chemistry I imagine he worked in some lab. For engineering he probably had to proofread technical manuals or something. One of his dissertations was "Identifying Non-obvious relationship factors using cluster weighted modeling and geographic regression". Cluster-weighted modeling (CWM) is an algorithm-based approach to non-linear prediction of outputs (dependent variables) from inputs (independent variables) based on density estimation using a set of models (clusters) that are each notionally appropriate in a sub-region of the input space. Geographic regression is a model for medical statistics.

So I guess we know why Reid tends to have so much medical knowledge when he didn’t go for a medical or biology degree.

I’m guessing that he met Gideon while working on his second or third PhD.

Did I mention that the mascot for Caltech is a beaver?

Edit: I corresponded with someone who went to Caltech and she informed me that Reid would have been very safe at Caltech because of the honor system. Students will take the piss out of each other and tease each other, but if a student demands that the others stop tormenting him/her, the other students are honor-bound to cease and desist. Apparently Caltech is full of oddballs and Reid would have fit in. I should note that Garcia also went to Caltech.

I also forgot to mention that Reid's parents might have set up some sort of trust fund or college fund for him when he was younger.

Someone pointed out to me that Caltech does not offer degrees in Psychology or Sociology so it is likely that after getting his PhDs that Reid went to another university for those. I wouldn't be surprised if he got them from Georgetown or one of the universities near Quantico. The fact that he only had bachelors degrees suggests to me that he didn't get to invest as much time. Perhaps he had already been recruited by Gideon and took those classes while in the FBI. I also find it interesting that he got BA degrees instead of BS degrees (especially since his PhDs are science-related).

Mannerisms & Physical Behavior

- Runs his hands through his hair or touches his face during stress.
- Finger-tapping or subtle hand-flicking when excited about an idea (especially mid-lecture).
- Rocks slightly or bounces a leg when anxious — the more prolonged or intense the stim, the deeper the anxiety.
- Slouched, slightly hunched posture — like someone who spent a childhood trying to take up less space.
- Avoids direct physical contact with strangers and acquaintances. Handshakes make him visibly uncomfortable. He is noted as germaphobic.
- Does not make strong eye contact with people he doesn't trust. With close friends, his eye contact is intense and direct.
- Carries bags of sugar cubes for his coffee. Drinks enormous amounts of coffee (reportedly ~$50/week worth). Switched briefly to green tea in Season 6 during the headache arc.
- Never wears matching socks

- Is capable of impressive sleight-of-hand magic — a skill he developed likely as a solitary childhood hobby.
- Plays chess as both recreation and meditation.

Around (Trusted People)

- More relaxed, more willing to be self-deprecating.
- Will make dry, quiet jokes — his humor is understated and often goes unnoticed, which he seems unbothered by.
- Still rambles, but the rambling has more warmth and meandering humor in it.
- Physically more at ease — he'll sit closer, lean in, make eye contact.
- Protective in a non-physical way: he speaks up, he stays, he notices when someone is not okay. But he is capable to be physical and was more shown in later season
- With Morgan: teasing, warmth, and genuine older-brother/younger-brother dynamic.
- With JJ: soft, trusted, long-running affection. She is possibly the first person he truly felt safe with on the team.
- With Garcia: enthusiastic intellectual chaos. They are joyfully weird together.
- With Hotch: respectful, slightly formal even after years. Hotch is a father figure and Spencer is careful around father figures.
- With Rossi: underrated closeness. Rossi is one of the few people who actually listens when Spencer talks.
- With Gideon (early seasons): mentor/student dynamic that was the closest thing to a father-son bond Spencer had in adulthood. Its loss devastated him.

TIMELINE:

1981 – Born; mother Diana is unmedicated during pregnancy

1985 | Age 4 – (could have been ‘86 but before Reid’s birthday) Four-year-old Reid plays chess in the park and is approached by a pedophile. The pedophile abused and murdered 6-year-old Riley Jenkins; who was on the T-ball team that William Reid coached. Diana tells Riley’s father about the creepy guy and Mr. Jenkins murders him. William burns Diana’s bloody clothes to prevent her from being implicated in the crime. He feels extreme guilt and stress & the marriage begins to deteriorate. Reid for some reason thinks that Riley was an imaginary friend rather than a real boy.

1991 – William Reid can no longer handle being with Diana. She apparently is resisting help and he gives up on trying to help her. He complains that she can't take care of herself and then in a supreme act of selfishness he leaves his 10-year-old child who is still at a critical point in social development alone with her.

He apparently leaves a letter and never comes back, never writes, never calls, and basically cuts off all contact. It's not clear whether or not he filed for divorce or if he stayed married so Diana would get money. If he divorced it was likely he paid child support, but Spencer wasn't getting the emotional support he needed. Reid is called in to see some sort of counselor to see how he is handling the father's departure, but he only says what he thinks his mother and teachers expect him to say.

From what Reid said in "In Name and Blood", it seems that Reid decided to be extra-well behaved to try to overcompensate for the issues at home. He probably volunteered to do extra work and offered to clean classrooms and such for teachers. He likely lived in terror of being taken away from his mother if someone suspected something was wrong– he was also probably afraid that his mother would be taken away and put in some state-run facility where she would be mistreated.

1992-1994 – Reid is in high school and ends up being lured out to the field house by Harper Hillman (who told him that Alexa Lisbon– "easily the prettiest girl in school"– wanted to see him) after school where he is ambushed by the entire football team. They strip him naked and tie him to a goalpost. Nobody helps and they laugh at him until they get bored and then leave him. It is not clear if they untied him or if he had to get himself free. He does not arrive home until after midnight, but his mother is having an episode and doesn't realize he's late. He never tells anyone (until he finally reveals it to Morgan over 16 years later).

From his statements in both "LDSK" and "Elephant's Memory" it is clear he had a very rough time in high school. In "Painless" Reid tells JJ that he increased his popularity in school by "coaching" the basketball team. He used his knowledge of mathematics and statistics to predict the actions of other teams and form a strategy to help his school's team win. It was not stated if this happened in high school or college, but since the writer said the team members were regressing back to high school mode, I think we can assume it was meant for high school. (Personally I think this bit doesn't fit with Reid's personality and history- and Reid had some very out-of-character moments in this episode).

1994 – Reid graduates from high school at the age of 12. He starts to notice girls at this age, but doesn't seem to act on it. It is not clear whether Reid heads off to Caltech at this point. Despite the fact that the father said the mother wasn't able to take care of herself years before, perhaps she has been taking medication so that Spencer won't be taken away from her. It's possible her medication stopped working as effectively– it is noted that there are diminishing returns when it comes to medications for schizophrenia.

From Reid's comments in "With Friends Like These" about schizophrenics not being able to bathe or dress themselves properly, I suspect that he may have had to help his mother with these tasks– maybe not quite at this point, but perhaps at some point before he was 18. Maybe Reid spent a year or two at a local college or took correspondence classes that would count as credit at Caltech. (I do believe that William Reid maintained either a joint account or a specific account in which he directly deposited money for Spencer and Diana and that his address was not on the statements and that was why Spencer did not know where he lived).

1995-1996 – Fourteen-year-old Reid is in college (likely Caltech at this point) and rides a bicycle to commute. He is capable of driving at this age, but is too young to be issued a driver's license. It is not clear what the arrangements are with his mother. It seems like she is afraid of flying so it is unlikely that she would fly out to see him. It doesn't seem like she would be able to commute by herself- so maybe Reid takes a bus or train or something back to see her. I'm guessing he made daily phonecalls to remind her to take her meds– although it is possible that there was some form of home healthcare that sent nurses over to check on her and help her if need be. (According to "The Fisher King II", Diana "wouldn't remember to eat" without being properly medicated and supervised). A schizophrenic person even when medicated often needs support from other people. I personally know someone who refused to take meds and developed crazy ideas about everything but pears and string beans being toxic– she got down to under 90lbs before she was sent to a hospital for help. Without someone to look after her, Diana could have become very ill and died.

1997-1998 – Reid gets his Bachelor degree (likely a BS rather than BA). An article is written in the paper about it.

1998-1999 – (A year after he got the BS/BA), 17-year-old Reid gets his first PhD (in mathematics). A follow-up article is written in the paper about it. The article is on William Reid's computer. It states that Reid considered studying Literature, but that he had already read all of the course material. When asked why he chose Caltech, he listed professors with whom he wanted to work– but made no mention of the weather or girls. In "Derailed", Reid mentioned that he used to practice magic tricks during exams.

1999-2000 – Unable to help her any more, 18-year-old Reid has his mother institutionalized in Bennington Sanitarium. She doesn't want to go and is very upset. He cries and is clearly conflicted. He is too upset to visit often so he writes letters to her every day.

At some point in the following years, Reid gets two more PhDs (Engineering and Chemistry). The dissertation for Engineering leans toward studies involving the medical field. Dissertation Title for Engineering degree: Identifying Non-obvious relationship factors using cluster weighted modeling and geographic regression.

The timeline is not very clear in the next few years. I sort of think that Reid met Gideon while in college and that Gideon took an interest in him. Perhaps Gideon gave a speech and Reid asked him very good questions and Gideon was impressed. Since Reid did get three PhDs I can assume he either didn't have a direction until after (or shortly before) the 3rd PhD– or he was biding time until he was old enough to be considered for employment with the FBI. It is also not very clear whether or not Reid's friend Ethan was around. He did say Ethan was from Las Vegas and that they competed in everything and then later they went to the FBI Academy together- but he didn't mention college so perhaps they went to different colleges but still stayed in touch. Maybe Reid encountered him when he was returning to Las Vegas to check on his mother.

At some point between getting the PhDs and "Masterpiece" in season 4, Reid gets BAs in Psychology and Sociology. (I admit that I'm puzzled why he went with BA instead of BS because his main focus has been in sciences).

2002-2004 — Reid went to the FBI Academy. His friend Ethan drops out on the first day. Reid continues but is supposedly remediated out of the training because he has difficulty with the physical requirements (I try to take that bit from "What Happens At Home" with a grain of salt– I felt the writing did a disservice to Reid on that in order to try to make Seaver look cooler or something– also, it is possible that Reid was exaggerating or being modest; I personally feel that Reid could have done at least some of the physical things as he is not inept and not completely out of shape– and he did show that he has some self-defense training on a few occasions). Perhaps Gideon was so eager for Reid to get to work on cases (or get him studying case files and assisting him with classes– it really looked to me like Reid was a student aid/teachers assistant to Gideon when the pilot started) that he requested Reid be remediated. He may have seen the physical stuff as unnecessary.

If we believe Hotch's "three lousy years" statement in LDSK, Reid could have joined the FBI at age 20 or 21 and spent a couple of years probationary period with Gideon as his mentor. (The FBI assigns Supervisory Special Agents as mentors to new agents). The probationary period used to last 2 years (although recently went to 3). In season 1 Reid was already an SSA- which could just be them fudging or could be that Reid had put in some years with the FBI at a desk job before joining the BAU. I should note that Reid was just barely 24 in "LDSK" which would have put him at 20 or 21 (when he joined). The article on his father's computer said that he joined the BAU at age 22. Either the article was mistaken, Hotch was exaggerating, or Reid did not become a full member, but was doing a sort of internship and studying under Gideon for the first 2 years. After his probationary period was up, he would have been eligible to join (although the FBI website said people generally need to put in 5 years– which is how long it takes to become a Special Agent– before being eligible; it usually takes people 8 to 10 years to get in). The BAU never takes anyone straight from the academy– this is according to the official FBI website. (See edit at end for ideas on how Reid could have attained a higher rank so quickly).

2004 — Reid at age 22 is the newest member of the team and works a case where women were strangled to death ("Tabula Rasa"). The killer falls and is comatose for 4 years. I know they couldn't get Mandy Patinkin for this, so I find it interesting that Reid was not with him– but then Reid sometimes went with Hotch instead of Gideon. If we go by the "5 years, 7 months, and 19 days" statement from "Mosley Lane" people think it might have been July 2004.

2005 The events in the pilot episode unfold. Reid turns 24 and asks JJ on a date. We don't know what happened, Reid says it was "top secret" but there is no romance after that and the two remain friends. Despite failing his gun qualification, Reid delivers the fatal shot to Philip Dowd in "LDSK". Reid reveals that he is tougher than he looks– and declares that Hotch kicks "like a 9-year-old girl". He isn't sure how to feel about killing someone, but it seems there were no negative repercussions on-screen afterward. Reid also conducts his first solo interview in

“The Fox”. Reid uses his skills as a magician, as well as his empathy for the mentally ill mindset to help save Elle and other hostages in “Derailed”.

2006 Reid goes to New York for the first time and has trouble using chopsticks. In LA he meets Lila Archer and gets what may be his first kiss. It seems he has never felt this way about a woman before. It is unclear whether or not they kept in touch. It was hinted at in “The Performer” that they may have spoken with each other a few times afterward. The team members learn that Reid’s mother is a paranoid schizophrenic who has been institutionalized– and that the mother used to read him Valentine’s poems. While it was never stated on camera– I think this helped the team members (such as Morgan) to understand Reid a bit better. Reid seems to be the only one who notices that Elle is struggling after being shot in her apartment. He confronts her and tries to get her to open up, but is ultimately unable to stop her from making a career-ending decision. (Some people have fanwanked that Reid got drunk and had sex with drunken Elle, but I find it unlikely). We learn that Reid is afraid of the dark and that he hates creamed spinach (in “The Boogeyman”).

2007 Reid is kidnapped, tortured, and drugged by a serial killer. Technically Reid is beaten to death, but revived with CPR. He later reveals in season 7 “Epilogue” that while “dead” he saw a bright light, felt warm, and heard a voice telling him that it was not his time to go. In self defense, he shoots and kills his captor. As a result of the drugging, Reid develops a drug addiction which lasted between one to four months. When Gideon suddenly leaves with no warning, Reid feels abandoned, but he perseveres. In"Children of the Dark" "In Name and Blood" we get insight into Reid’s childhood, with his comments about how a child with a mentally ill parent would behave. We learn that Reid is afraid of rickety elevators. We learn that Reid is very enthusiastic about Halloween– and that he is a big fan of Dave Rossi.

2008 Reid witnesses a coldblooded murder that he was unable to prevent. It causes him to have cravings for Dilaudid so he begins attending Beltway Clean Cops meetings. He seems to get a sponsor named John who is implied to be someone high up. While trapped in a room with Hotch and a brutal murderer on death row, Reid manages to save the day by distracting the man by rambling on about medical information and psychology for 13 minutes. Reid finally tells someone about the goalpost incident in high school, and shows his anger at bullies (and the people who have the power to stop them but don't) and his empathy for abused/bullied children. He risks his life, but he saves the life of a traumatized boy. Reid also shows how perceptive he is when he intercepts a grieving father in "Tabula Rasa", whom Reid realized was planning to shoot the killer. Reid and Prentiss are taken hostage by a cult leader. Reid feels guilty when Prentiss confesses to being an FBI agent (and gets quite a beating for it) in order to protect him. We learn how much Diana Reid loves her son, and Reid discovers that his father (whom he hasn't seen in 17 years) is still in town. Reid is still angry with his estranged father and suspects him of murder. He discovers instead, that his father helped cover up a murder to which Diana was partially a witness. We also get a look at Reid's childhood bedroom. We also learn that Reid (who has just turned 28) is working on a degree in Philosophy. An apparently single Reid is envious of Morgan– who teases Reid about having "only one name to remember" on his list of conquests (although it is unclear whether or not this is true– perhaps Reid scored with Lila, or maybe he was still a virgin), but Morgan convinces him to flirt with bartender Austin by showing off magic tricks. It is unclear whether or not this relationship ever went anywhere. (I'm assuming it didn't because Reid was openly checking out women in other episodes– if you look carefully he repeatedly checks out Emily's rack and ass).

2009 We learn that while Reid can talk about sexual sadism, he is uncomfortable talking about his own sexual experiences (or lack thereof). Reid feels sympathy for a killer suffering from Dissociative Identity Disorder and, after stopping one personality from committing suicide, begins making regular visits to try to help the main persona (Adam) to escape from the killer persona. Reid contracts inhalation Anthrax and nearly dies, but manages to figure out where the antidote is in time to save himself and others. (Note: Inhalation Anthrax has a 98% mortality rate with only two known cases of survival) While thinking he might die, he had Garcia record an audio message for his mother (no mention of his father is made so we may assume he hasn't completely forgiven him). In "Faceless, Nameless" Reid is shot in the leg while saving a victim (inside info: Matthew was unable to walk or stand so a stunt double had to do the walking/tackling scene). He shoots and wounds the man who shot him (this is the first time in which Reid has not killed the person he shot– it is also the first time that he shot someone with his own gun). Reid lies to Hotch about being cleared for travel and is left to sit with Garcia while the team goes out on cases. In "Outfoxed", Reid is able to walk with only one crutch and in "100" he is off the crutches and using a cane.

2010 In “The Uncanny Valley” Reid is walking without assistance and he shows his almost alpha-male side by intimidating a child molester into revealing the location of the unsub. In “Solitary Man” we learn that Reid’s doctor still has him under advisement not to do any climbing because of his knee. (This was likely an inside joke poking fun at Matthew– but apparently he actually had difficulty getting in and out of the ditch so they had to limit the takes). In “The Internet is Forever” Reid claims to not have a personal e-mail address (I say personal because he clearly has a work e-mail address since the team members e-mail things to him in other episodes). In “JJ” we see Reid popping antacids and letting the team assume he is having a bad reaction to dairy. He seems to get ill on the plane as well. Throughout the episodes he is showing subtle signs of being in pain. Despite the pain, Reid seems to be enthusiastic about his plans for Halloween and has tickets for a Halloween event and tries to get the team members to go with him. By “25 to Life”, Reid is looking disheveled (messy hair, untucked shirt) and is notably quieter than usual; but none of the team seem to notice.

2011 In “Corazon” we learn that Reid has been suffering severe migraine headaches which last for days at a time. Not seeing anything on the brain scan, the doctor suggests a psychosomatic reason for the pain. Reid panics, thinking he is accused of having mental illness. Worrying that his team members will make him “feel like a baby”, he tries to keep it from them. (not sure on which episode) Reid asks Prentiss to go to a movie with him– we learn that he apparently now understands Russian (he did not know Russian in 2007). In “Coda” Reid is able to communicate with a severely autistic boy (Note: If Reid had autism, this would have been the perfect time for them to reveal it– but Reid clearly spoke about autism without any sense of relation to himself, so IMO it was as close to proof as we are going to get that he is not autistic). He takes an interest in playing piano and buys a piano keyboard. We learn that he seems to live somewhere near the Van Ness Metro station in DC and he was carrying a book on migraines. In “Valhalla” Reid tells Emily about his headaches and that he’s seen several doctors but that none of them have been able to figure it out. Reid later tells Morgan about the headaches and his fear of developing schizophrenia in “With Friends Like These” (Morgan seems to totally miss the fact that Reid had the headaches BEFORE Emily died). It is not evident on screen, but according to the writers the pep talk from Morgan seems to have been the end of Reid’s headache problems. Reid sleeping on the plane was supposed to somehow clue the audience in that everything was now fine with him. Later while in grief counseling led by Hotch (in “Hanley Waters”), Reid admits to being depressed and that he doesn’t know if the job is worth it anymore. He says he has not been on a couch like that since his father left (which shows that maybe he did not get any counseling after the events in “Revelations”– unless they had him sit on a chair instead). We learn that Reid likes going to horror movies with Morgan, Garcia, and Seaver. In “Big Sea” we learn that Reid somehow has the expertise to do the work of a forensic anthropologist (as he examines bones and reconstructs skeletons). In “Supply and Demand” we get further confirmation that Reid enjoys Indian food when he asks the team if any of them want to join him for dinner at an Indian restaurant with good chicken tandoori.

Picking up a few months later in “It Takes A Village” we learn that Reid has been going to the firing range to practice his shooting skills. Despite being shocked at the news that Prentiss was not really dead, Reid remains focused and professional. He seems to be more confident and almost aggressive as he suggests that Ian Doyle be used as bait for the unsub who has kidnapped Ian’s son Declan. Reid defiantly wears a fugly vest that looks like a grandmother’s rug and is somewhat confrontational with the senate committee that is investigating the events that led to Ian Doyle’s death while in the custody of BAU agents. Reid urges the committee to blame him for the decision as it was his suggestion. Reid was the only member who did not request reinstatement in the BAU (the writer later explained that Reid didn’t feel it was necessary to ask for a job that he already had– but this was unclear in the episode). When called “Agent” and told to calm down, Reid responded with “This is calm, and its 'Doctor’”. This begins the trend of Reid preferring to be called 'doctor’ instead of by his job title (before it was established that Gideon wanted Reid to be called doctor so that people would take him more seriously). Reid shot the female unsub– making it the first time that he killed someone with his own weapon– after she fired at the team and killed Ian Doyle. In “Proof” we learn that Reid went to JJ’s house crying for 10 weeks after the alleged death of Prentiss and he feels very betrayed. (Some fans complained that this crying was excessive, but I personally cried every single day for a year and a half when my father died and then moved to every other day for a few months– 3 years later its probably at least once a week. Reid is a very sensitive and caring person. Plus seeing reminders of people tend to trigger the sorrow. Reid has eidetic memory and I’m sure he was constantly assaulted with reminders of Emily). He admits to her that he thought about using Dilaudid again. Prentiss tries to smooth things over with Reid (according to the writers, Reid was cold with both Prentiss and JJ but that did not come across on screen– but only the anger with JJ came across; again, the writers had to clarify offscreen that this was the end of any bad feelings between Reid and JJ). In the end, Reid shows up late for Rossi's pasta party. (I fanwanked that Reid may have been late due to attending a Beltway Clean Cops meeting, but now excuse was actually given). In "Epilogue" we learn that while Reid was technically dead during the events in "Revelations" he hallucinated a bright light, felt warmth, and heard a voice telling him it wasn't his time to die. This left him quite confused afterward. (I personally don't think this fit with the events as established and Reid's line after saying he was a man of science was either the writer pushing his own beliefs or just showed his lack of research on the topic of near death experiences since there are many plausible explanations for the visions people see during that state. I don't think this would lead Reid to absolutely preclude the possibility of it having been a true experience with seeing the afterlife; however, Reid would have read up on and found out about many– if not all– of the theories that explain what some people report experiencing. So Reid's claim that it couldn't be explained was BS).

2012 In "True Genius" Reid meets a young genius CEO and feels as if he's disappointed himself by not accomplishing more with his life. He questions whether or not he belongs in the BAU but after a pep talk with Emily and solving the case (talking the unsub in to surrendering), Reid seems to feel satisfied with his job. We also learn that Reid turned 30 sometime before but that the team missed/forgot his birthday. In "Snake Eyes" Reid claims that he has been banned from multiple casinos in Nevada because of his card counting (again I take issue with this because Reid was shown to prefer using the machines, was not banned before, and is intelligent enough to not get caught). He uses his poker playing skills to infiltrate a gambling event and suss out the unsub. He wins a large sum of money (having used Rossi's money as a start) but it is unclear whether or not he was able to retrieve it and return the original sum to Rossi. In the first part of the two hour season 7 finale "Hit / Run" we see Reid dressed up as the 4th Doctor (of "Doctor Who" fame) and he states that he knitted his own scarf (how long did he say it took?). He performed magic tricks to entertain JJ's son, Henry, while at the wedding of JJ and Will LaMontagne and danced with Prentiss and JJ's mom. (Yes, I did throw in some unimportant things here because there really wasn't much given for Reid after "True Genius"– he wasn't even visible during the wedding ceremony for JJ and Will).

In “The Silencer” (premiere of season 8) we learn that Reid has a colleague named Alex Blake, who is the newest member of the BAU (replacing Prentiss). Reid apparently guest lectured numerous times in Blake’s classes when she was a professor of Forensic Linguistics. In “The Pact” while discussing how a victim was lured out, it was suggested that perhaps the a drug dealer was calling one of the victims. Reid stated that the drug dealer does not call you and that “You call him”. This was a small thing, but given Reid’s habit of saying “you” when discussing something to which he personally relates, it may suggest that he actually did have a dealer when using Dilaidid. In “Through the Looking Glass”, Blake seems to jokingly suggest that Reid may have Aspergers (Reid either did not hear her or pretended such). She later apologizes and he accepts (although whether or not he actually has Aspergers is not answered– the writer of this episode later said that she personally thinks he does, but there was no confirmation from the showrunner or other writers so it is not canon). In “God Complex” we find out that Reid has not been having headaches for awhile, thanks to a mysterious female geneticist that he has been speaking to on the phone for 6 months. She recommended some sort of self-treatment that involves taking Magnesium, Riboflavin, and sporadic shots of B2 (Note: Riboflavin is B2 but the writer didn’t seem to know that). Desperate to get help, he apparently contacted her and sent MRIs for her to review. She became interested in him and they began a strange correspondence which involves Reid paging her from a payphone and her calling him back. They usually talk only on Sundays. There is an unnamed “he” to which they both refer that seems to be some sort of threat. Reid broke the Sunday-only rule and it is clear that he has become infatuated with the woman, but she claims to fear for his safety if “he” ever found out. Reid offers to help her, but she refuses and suggest that it would be too dangerous for Reid. Before hanging up, she says “Love you”– the first time Reid has been told this from a potential love interest. Morgan later teases Reid when he realizes something is going on and tries to get information, but Reid is tight-lipped. In “The Bad News Bears” “The Apprenticeship”, Morgan convinces Reid to practice hitting a ball as a favor in return for having given Reid a ride to the airport. At the end of the episode Reid fills in for another agent on the BAU softball team and (after striking out at least once and having two strikes again) hits the ball and makes a home run– winning the game for the team. Morgan is so ecstatic he hugs Reid and picks him up.

Childhood Friend

Eveline Briar
What if he had a consistent person by his side all throughout the series, starting in his childhood. Start from the beginning first, childhood to before the beginning of season 1. Based it also on his childhood information you just stated. What would change on his childhood of he had someone.

Rewrite his childhood, what if he did had a friend, what would just change? Just more scenarios of them and their surroundings, their childhood. Up to their childhood and before or after he was recently hired by BAU. Just before the series started. Based it on the TV series itself, make it realistic.

What if my character met Spencer Reid during their childhood, when they were both children. Ever being 11 years old and Reid being 10 years old, just after his father left.

After losing her parents in a plane crash, Eve (Eveline Laurent, French-American, she had a little accent) is left in the care of her aunt. She isn't shy, but she tends to keep her distance from others, preferring not to get too attached. She has dry humor witty, charming, but often keep it to herself, she could be an asshole if she wanted to. Although, she looks doeful, she can look extremely intimidating. Which would work on her favor, to scare away potential creeps. She's a little taller than the other girls her age, several inch taller than Spencer when they were children.

And a secret nerd, she likes fantasy novels and games, not that she kept is as a secret, but she seldomly shares her interest with others. But she would share it with Spencer, talking about the book, like Lord of the Rings, Narnia, Comics, Batman, etc. She plays the violin when she was a kid because her aunt thinks it can help with the grief. She stills plays it when she grew up and gotten quite good at it.

Eveline is intelligent and observant, with light brown wavy hair, hazel-brown eyes, almost green, and a dusting of freckles across her cheeks. She has a quiet love for drawing and often tries to create things with her hand, sculpting, embroidery, painting, etc. She has a soft voice, she's good at singing, hums often unconsciously. She likes stars and astronomy, often drags Spencer to stargazing, likes to listen to him talking about the stars while she looks at them. She likes to read a lot, from fictional to non-fiction. Likes to learn the lore and background of the books she reads and share it with Spencer. Though she tries to be mindful of how she presents herself, she has a habit of becoming unintentionally affectionate once she feels comfortable around someone. She tries to teach him French, trying to see if he could.

When Eveline meets Spencer, the two quickly form a deep bond, becoming inseparable from that point on. When they were children, Specer would practice his magic tricks to Eveline who would be impressed by it. They also met Ethan.

Ethan and Spencer would often compete with each other. Spelling B's, science fair, both are smart. Eveline was also smart, not much like the both of them, but enough to follow. She's too tired most of the time and would often just fall asleep if they go on tangents at times. Ethan is more of troublemaker, mischievous, often use his smart for both academic and not so much. Ethan would often dragged Eve with him to his pranks. The three are close, talking about everything and nothing. They were a trio.

How would their relationship develop over the years leading up to the start of the series? Explore their lives from childhood through grade school, high school, and college, focusing on how their bond evolves over time. Even if Eve is one year older than Spencer, Spencer is grades ahead or the same (based it on canon). She's actually quite popular in school, people calling her ice queen for being cool headed pretty girl. She's actually pretty intimidating, and slightly tall. Would sometimes ask Spencer weird hypotheticals and the possibilities of things.

When she came to know about the bullying; the goalpost, she directly went to the girl or whoever genius decided it was a good idea to bully anyone. She really despised anyone who thinks they can do anyone just because they can. She humiliated them, she sees them sometimes, she has classes with them, before she punched them. Of course, she was in trouble, but she calmly reported the incident about the bullying, not the details, and asked how can an institution who promises the safety of children can let this happened. With logic and laws to back her statement up.

She made a face and told Spencer that she didn't do it for him, she hated the thought of people hurting others for their own enjoyment. She despise it.

There is little romance between them, but in subtle, unconscious ways, they consistently choose each other. Their comfort with one another, rooted in childhood, remains constant and should be evident in their interactions. In the early years, Eveline sometimes feels embarrassed by how physically affectionate she can be, though she tries to restrain herself. Intimidating as she looked, she's quite expressive, she smiles easily with him, or with any other people, when there's a reason. She's easily tired and sleepy, would spend some of her free time sleeping

Over time, she comes to accept this part of herself, and her touch becomes more natural and unguarded, occasionally even initiated by Spencer. The touch became normal as months go by, often times they'll be brushing skin, hold hands when they walk, they often times share a couch, sometimes the other will prop their legs on the others lap, etc. Or sometimes lay and hangout or sleep on the same bed (whenever Eve thinks Spencer would be ok with it) sometimes she would hug him when they're laying down.

Ethan was supposed to join the FBI the same time. But he backed out the first day. Now he lives in New Orleans (follow canon, give reasons to why, he left). Now they're a duo

As they grow older, they continue to spend time together, maintaining their connection despite their increasingly busy lives. Eveline pursues a career as an embalmer, while Spencer meets and interacts with many different people. Consider how their lives intersect and diverge, and what impact this has on their friendship. Although even if they're not physically together, their calls spans for several hours that it feels like they're together. They sometimes read the same books and share what they think to each other. She likes to play with his hair because he would let it get so long.

They visit and stay in each other's places when they have time. She misses him everyday, she tells him that often, casually. She hugs him often. Likes to tease him sometimes, in a way that seems like she's serious but she's actually joking. Would kiss him adoringly on the face. Would ften times fix his hair. He sometimes wouldn't say anything when she touches him so she ask if she makes him uncomfortable, and say you know it's fine to say you're not comfortable with it right?

At times, Eveline wonders if she takes up too much of Spencer’s time, questioning whether he should be forming closer connections with others. She is not insecure, but the thought lingers occasionally. Throughout it all, she continues to draw, using it as a steady outlet for her thoughts and emotions. The touches still continues, gentle in a way and careful not to hurt, she asked one time what he thinks of her, does he think of her as a sister.

Eveline is attractive, with a soft appearance, wavy hair, doe-like hazel eyes, and a light scattering of freckles across her cheeks. She doesn’t dwell much on her looks, but occasionally, she finds herself thinking about it because of other people's comments. She isn't sure if they're just being nice.
